According to Bob Burford, broaching midlife doesn't have to be a crisis. In fact, in Half Time, Burford insists that it is actually an opportunity to begin the better half of life. The first half is busy with "getting and gaining, earning and learning," doing what you can to survive, while clawing your way up the ladder of success. The second half of life should be about regaining control, calling your own shots, and enjoying "God's desire ... for you to serve him just by being who you are, by using what he gave you to work with." What lies between the two is "halftime." Buford argues that whether you are a millionaire, a manager, or a teacher, you will one day have to transition from the struggle for success to the quest for significance. Halftime, then, is a quiet time of deliberate decision-making, restructuring, and passionate contemplation of your heart's deepest desires. Buford's writing is grounded in the real-life experience of success and failure, and most poignantly, the death of his son. While he has led a very successful life in the eyes of the world, Buford's personal stories reveal that his faith in Christ is his central priority. Instead of a transition to be feared, Buford makes midlife an introspective journey of abundance that will unleash God's best for you. -- Jill Heatherly

Rating at the half way point in the book

By Mark Wiley

I am going through this book with a group of friends. I really like the concept of evaluating where you are and making sure the second half of your life is leading to significance in a Godly manner.

However, I was turned off by the over the top set of experiences the author comes from. I just continued to find it hard to relate to this guy. The group discussion has been very positive and from that perspective it has been worth the purchase.

I have been getting more out of Verticle Church and Experiencing God.

Update: I had fewer objections to the book as we are further into it.
